The ultimate in high-performance PC power! Our new 486-based computers offer a dramatic breakthrough in speed and expandability, making them ideal file servers in a XENIX/UNIX multiuser or a local area network environment.

486-based computers can operate at up to twice the speed of a 386 computer. Large tasks such as inventory management and statistical analysis can be streamlined for maximum productivity.

The Tandy 4833 LX/T's 80486DX microprocessor features Floating Point Capability, which delivers co-processing power for math-intensive operations. An 8K cache in the processor stores recently accessed information for instant throughput. Plus, memory interleaving, as well as advanced 64K SRAM memory caching, optimize your data retrieval.

The Tandy 4820 SX/T offers you a lower-cost alternative in a 486SX by supporting an optional 487 coprocessor for Floating Point Capability.

Both systems offer extraordinary expansion options, including memory upgrades of up to 64MB. And IDE technology lets you add SmartDrive™ hard drives without a controller card.

Math Coprocessors

A math coprocessor off-loads intensive math operations from the CPU—handling in one instruction what would take hundreds of instructions on a general-purpose CPU. What this means to you is speed, efficiency and accuracy. And, if you think a math coprocessor is only for scientists, engineers and programmers, think again. Many programs use math operations "behind the scenes." Math coprocessors can be a big help to business users as well. In fact, a math coprocessor can make hundreds of popular programs run up to five times faster, including graphics and desktop publishing, charts and diagrams, font generation, Postscript emulation, computer-aided design, spreadsheets and statistics, and databases. Installation is easy, too; just plug your coprocessor in and go.

BRING YOUR MEMORY UP TO SPEED

Increase Your Potential and Your Productivity With Memory Upgrades

Like all Tandy products, our computer memory kits are manufactured to exacting standards and each one is carefully tested for quality, compatibility and proper operation in your Tandy computer. Many of our memory kits can also be used to upgrade other PC compatibles—check with your nearby Radio Shack authorized dealer for details.

MS-DOS 5.0 and OS/2. Memory management enhancements in these operating systems, and the Windows 3.0 environment, take full advantage of additional memory in your computer. These memory management features provide more memory for your applications, the ability to run several programs at once (multitasking), faster execution and more efficient use of your computer resources.

Local Area Networks. Additional memory at the workstation allows device drivers and other system software to load into upper memory, freeing valuable 640K base memory for application use. In the server, additional memory provides performance improvement and maintains peak processing as the size of your LAN grows.

SCO XENIX. As the number of users accessing your SCO XENIX system increases, additional extended memory will insure there are no processing or access delays.

What Are Paint and Graphics Programs?

Paint programs are used in conjunction with desktop publishing and multimedia tools to draw a graphic image. The programs have multiple "brushes" to use for different effects, such as lines, strokes or boxes. The programs also let you define an image as a "brush" and then use the image to draw and paint.

Graphics programs produce high-quality charts and graphs for printout onto overhead slides, Polaroid® palletes and more. Most have several different types of charts already formatted, such as pie charts and bar graphics. You can easily specify the type of graph you want displayed and printed.
